

It's a pity, in the end I thought I could win but they passed me with just 100 metres to go. I felt I was in shape, so I did a good action but it wasn't enough: simply the last climbing was too hard and my legs were not at their best after this long race and my solo attack with several uphill parts and a strong headwind. Anyways, I think I followed the right strategy because it was very difficult to control the race: moreover, when you feel in a good condition, you need to try these kind of actions
